Table 43 (Continued)

4. Race x class x sex interaction ($p < .03$) -- Univariate and multivariate tests confirm that hardcore black and middle-class white females see a black worker as less likely to work together with a white worker than hardcore black males and middle-class white males, while this trend is reversed for the other groups (i.e., female > male for other race x class groups). These tests also indicate that hardcore black females and middle-class black males and white working-class females see a black worker as much less likely to admire a white worker than subjects in the remaining cells do. Finally, these tests confirm that white middle-class females see a black worker as much, much less likely to give orders to a white worker as black hardcore females and working-class males, while the other cells are intermediate.
